Where Only Death Is Seen

By FRED B. PITNEY.

(Copyright, 1915, by The New York Tribune.) Paris, Aug. 7 .- I have just returned from six days spent in visiting the French front, from a point northeast of Verdun to Nancy. In that time I have seen every activity of the armies from Paris to the first battle line, and I am told it is the most comprehensive view of the war any correspondent has had.

At any rate, I have done such widely varying things as taking part in a theatrical performance for the amusement of the "Poilus," and the same day I stood in the most exposed position on the French front-a position I crossed sixty feet of open ground between the French and German trenches to reach.

It only serves to illustrate the incredible conditions of modern warthe German Crown Prince to envelop fare when I say that I will probably never appreciate at its true value Verdun continue to be met with failure the danger I ran to reach and return from that position. I will never official report to-night says the reis the claim of the French War Office, appreciate it because, though I stood between hostile armies, thousands sistance of the Russians has been strong, every man of whom was intent solely upon killing, though every minute was crowded with action, though bullets sang and shells screamed and crashed, yet I was in the midst of the most utter solitude and

Last night passed quietly on the western part of the front. There has been reported nothing more than some engagements with hand grenades in the vicinity of Souchez and artillery fighting in the region of Tracy-le-Val and in the neighborhood of Berry-au-Bac.

In the western section of the Argenne there has been a continuance of the very spirited fighting with grenades and bombs. An attack of the enemy in the vicinity of Hill No. 213 has been repulsed.

For just three weeks the Germans, under Field Marshal von Hindenburg, have been trying to force this front and to cut off the Russian armies in their retreat from Warsaw.
